DESTRUCTIVE SWISS STORM

The Republic Ravaged by the Most Violent Hurricane That Has Swept Over It in More Than Half a Century

GENEVA, March 21.—Details of a terrible hurricane which passed over Central, Eastern and Northern Switzerland a couple of weeks ago, show that the damage caused was far greater than at first reported. Such a violent wind—in some places it blew from 140 to 150 miles an hour—has not been experienced in this country since 1863, and it is surprising that the loss of life has not been greater.

Miles of forests were mowed down, houses and chalets in the mountains were swept away, telegraph and telephone wires and poles were destroyed, electric tramcars stopped running in several places, and a number of avalanches fell.

At Appenzell a carriage containing four persons was lifted from the road and hurled down a ravine, the occupants being seriously injured. Near St. Gall the main line was blocked with fallen trees, while at Rorschach roofs of houses and chimneys littered the streets, making them dangerous.

The hurricane was followed by a heavy snowfall in the Alps, two feet to three feet of snow being reported.
